Construction Workforce Development: What can you and your team do to make a difference?

It doesn't take long during any conversation with a construction industry professional for the topic to turn to "needing people." AGC Georgia, along with our partners at Construction Ready, dedicate an overwhelming number of resources to helping find innovative ways to introduce construction to students in our K-12 education system and adults who are looking for a rewarding career path.

Are you versed in how your firm can get connected to many of these avenues to help build a sustainable talent pipeline? Are you making the most of industry resources to introduce your firm to individuals who are interested in construction?

There's no quick solution, and as the AGC Georgia team says, "Doing nothing gets you just that – nothing!" The limited number of qualified workers for the construction industry can only improve with the involvement of those who are most impacted by the situation. It takes getting connected with your local school systems and having industry team up with academic leaders. It takes contractors sharing their need for skilled talent to state leaders who allocated budget funding for training programs. It takes building relationships with your local technical colleges and helping identify instructors, curriculum needs and much more. The ways to get involved are endless!

Please join our panel of workforce development leaders for an open discussion on what's working and where more industry support is needed to make even greater strides in bringing attention to construction careers.
